The European educational project Continuing Education in Structural Connections (CESTRUCO) is streamed into the area of design of structural connections. It is prepared by the European Convention of Constructional Steelwork (ECCS) Technical Committee TC10 "Structural Connections" to disseminate the latest European results in research and standardization during the period of transferring the European pre-standard into the European Standard. The aim of the project is to improve the competitiveness of the structural steelwork by dissemination of the best European practice and knowledge in the structural connections.
The project is scheduled for three years and is divided into following steps. The first step of the project is denoted to collecting the questions from European practice. During the next step, the answers to those questions will be prepared in form of a printed educational manual and an internet course. In the last step, the materials will be disseminated into the European practice in the national languages of the participants of this project.
All questions arising from the practice are welcomed to help to create the project materials and tools. We are looking for questions related to welding, bolting, structural design and manufacturing of steel and aluminium connections. The project partners with support of ECCS TC10 will prepare the answers including a background document.
To send the questions go to the "Submit your question" section which will help you to send it using a simple
